

Long-Form Forgery for Dummies

I'm a computer moron. I know nothing about pixels, layers, file formats, etc. So this analysis is for people like myself who have no way of knowing who or what to believe on computer scanning and editing. I believe there is excellent, convincing analysis out there for those who are technologically adept enough to understand it. This is "Long-Form Forgery for Dummies", because that's me and this is the level I operate on. Lol. Welcome, technologically challenged friends. You're in the right place. =)

The Full Faith and Credit Clause of the US Constitution says that when properly attested as genuine, the acts and records of one state must be given "full faith and credit" in other states, and that Congress would set the criteria for authenticating the acts and records of a state. They did so in 28 USC 1738 by saying that laws and court records would be authenticated by the use of proper legal seals.

For Hawaii vital records, the Dept of Health's "Rules of Practice and Procedure" say that (emphasis mine):

"The official seal of the department of health shall be embossed near the signature of the director of health to verify commissions of appointment of deputy directors and notaries public, certificates, and other formal official documents on which the official seal has been customarily used or is appropriate to be used, as the director of health may determine on a case-by-case basis."

And the HDOH Administrative Rules say:

(b) Form of certification. Standard certified copies shall contain an appropriate certification statement over the signature of the registrar having custody of the record and be impressed with the raised seal of the issuing office. The signature may be photographed or entered by mechanical means. The paper shall display the official seal of the Department of Health or the seal of the State.

So the authenticating mark of a certified copy of a birth certificate from Hawaii must include a raised seal for the HDOH.

There are 3 images claimed for Obama's certified long-form birth certificate:

- 1) the PDF that Obama posted,
- 2) a black/white scan/photocopy of the long-form that Obama's counsel gave reporters, &
- 3) a photo of the long-form Obama showed the press.

The PDF shows a very faint circle of white dots beginning in the area for evidence for a delayed birth certificate or alterations. But the PDF is also in a format that allows editing so the PDF serves no evidentiary purpose at all.

Obama's black-and-white scan/copy lacks any sign of a seal but that doesn't necessarily mean anything because neither the cross-hatches on the security paper NOR the raised seal showed on a scan of my daughter's death certificate either. So the B/W scan/copy serves no evidentiary purpose at all.

That leaves us the photograph – claimed to be an actual photograph of the certified copy that Obama showed reporters. This is what the reporters were supposedly able to see for themselves. The one way to actually see an authenticated record.

It has no sign of a seal.

I'll put that portion of it here so you can magnify it and check for yourself (all images in this article have been C&P'ed and cropped to take less space. I'm typing this in Word and will save it as a PDF):

I asked myself if that could be because a seal wouldn't show up on a photo – especially if the light didn't hit the seal's raised surface just right. So I tested it on my daughter's death certificate, which has a raised seal similar to the one shown on the Factcheck COLB. No matter what angle I had, what lighting, or even whether my hand jiggled when I took the picture, every photo showed evidence of the seal when magnified (especially if I tipped my screen back just a bit, which I also did when checking for a seal on the photo of Obama's BC). Here are the pics I took (this is in a PDF so you can magnify them as you like):

Just for kicks I also did some side views also, to compare with the Factcheck photos of seals and print facing into daylight. Interesting effects when magnified:

So here (on the next page) is a comparison of magnifications of the photo of Obama's long-form and my daughter's death certificate with similar lighting and angle, trying my best to make the cross-hatches comparable in size so you can compare apples with apples :

HDOH Director Loretta Fuddy said she sent Obama 2 certified copies of his long-form birth certificate. What Obama showed the media had no seal and could not have been the document that Fuddy sent him. It had to be something that he made up. Why would he make up a document if he had an original, unless the original needed to be changed? (Something the scanning format specifically allowed him to do with the PDF, and he almost certainly simply showed the media a print-out of the manipulated PDF, which would explain why there was no raised seal.)

And the media didn't even question.

And the HDOH has apparently not reported to law enforcement Obama posting - as if it was genuine - an altered document. A forgery.

So right here we have a microcosm of this whole eligibility story: a criminally lying Obama, the Hawaii DOH acting like everything is fine and dandy, and a subservient media not even noting the basic facts while joining Obama in ridiculing those of us who do.
